

Jo works globally as Development Trainer, Coach and Consultant with individuals and organisations in private, public and third sectors. With an initial qualification in natural sciences and post graduate degrees in experiential learning and teaching plus qualifications in coaching and leadership Jo brings theory into practice and draws on a wide repertoire of skills and experiences.

A highly skilled, experienced trainer specialising in communication skills Jo has supported the professional development of people in all levels from Senior Executives of multimillion dollar trading houses, to managers, international teams and operations staff in banking, tourism and education organisations, and owner-directors of SMEs. She has most recently been a British Council consultant across S

Asia supporting the development of knowledge exchange (university-business, community and government links) regionally. Jo currently leads the British Council's Researcher Connect – a global professional development program for researchers and academics.